1. Ratio of Cultivated Land and Persons Engaged in Agriculture

Cultivated land under the management of farm households is 759,950.1 million hectares accounting for about 14% of the total area of Japan. By prefecture, the ratio of cultivated land is highest in Fukuoka Prefecture with 371,500.2 million hectares, followed by Shizuoka. (With 312,492.0 million hectares. The ratio is lowest in Ehime Prefecture with 8,068.1 million hectares. The two lowest ratios are in Ibaraki Prefecture with 8,375.4 million hectares and Yamagata Prefecture with 8,750.3 million hectares. (With 8,068.1 million hectares).)

2. Structure of Farm Households by Degree of Engagement

Persons engaged in agriculture: On this map, members of the farm household, 18 years of age or over, who were engaged in agriculture for more than 100 days in the year preceding the survey.

The farm household, as referred to here, include the households which were engaged in agriculture on more than 100 days in the year preceding the survey. The farm household, as referred to here, includes the household which were engaged in agriculture either on more than 100 days in the year preceding the survey or in 100 or more days in the year preceding the survey. The farm household, as referred to here, includes the household which were engaged in agriculture on more than 100 days in the year preceding the survey. The farm household, as referred to here, includes the household which were engaged in agriculture on more than 100 days in the year preceding the survey. The farm household, as referred to here, includes the household which were engaged in agriculture on more than 100 days in the year preceding the survey. The farm household, as referred to here, includes the household which were engaged in agriculture on more than 100 days in the year preceding the survey.